In response to competencies for student affairs/higher education professionals outlined by the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators (NASPA) an American of College Personnel Association (ACPA) Student Affairs Competencies regarding social justice and inclusion (SJI) and assessment, evaluation, and research (AER), the Higher Education in Ghana Study Abroad (HEGSA) program will focus on the role of student affairs and assessment practices in the context of Ghanaian higher education. As social justice educators, student affairs and higher education professionals should understand the implications of higher education and the role of student affairs in an international context. Particularly considering the sociohistorical relationship between the United States and West Africa, HEGSA will expand beyond Western ideals of social justice education and engage participants in a critical examination of concepts related to power, privilege, and oppression. Moreover, West Africa is often overlooked as a location for study abroad programs; there is a great deal of formal and cultural knowledge waiting the attention of U.S. higher education scholars and practitioners.

This course is targeted toward current graduate students in student affairs/higher education/international education graduate programs and student affairs/higher education/international education professionals who have experience with higher education settings. Overall, you will: (a) gain new insight into the rich culture and traditions of the country and people of Ghana, (b) explore the role of higher education in Ghana and its connections to the P-12 educational pipeline in a post liberation Ghanaian context, (c) articulate the role of student affairs in the context of Ghanaian colleges and universities, and (d) collaborate with a Ghanaian higher education partner on a project-based experiential learning opportunity.

The Higher Education in Ghana Study Abroad program not only expands the scope of study abroad options, it also focuses on project based learning for students in collaboration with higher education/student services professionals in Ghana. You will engage in readings, reflections and discussions prior to, during and following the study abroad program. In addition, you will work as collaborators with a partner at a Ghanaian higher education institution. During the study abroad experience in the country of Ghana, you will engage in cultural experiences, gain historical knowledge, visit with educators, policymakers, and administrators at varying levels of the educational pipeline, visit various institutions of higher education, engage with student services professionals affiliated with the institutions we'll visit, interact with higher education/student services graduate students, and develop, co-produce, and present materials during a symposium on the campus of the University of Maryland.

Course objectives include:

1. Gain knowledge, through experience and direct study, the culture, history and structure of education in post liberation Ghana and other countries on the African continent
2. Articulate cultural, social, political and historical connections between Ghana and the United States
3. Understand and articulate the role of education in post liberation Ghana
4. Examine and expand one's knowledge of higher education in post liberation Ghana
5. Learn from student services personnel professionals (SSPPs) at institutions of higher learning in Ghana their perceptions of their work in a Ghanaian context

Candace Maddox Moore, Ph.D., is the Faculty Director for the Ghana program, Clinical Assistant Professor in the Higher Education, Student Affairs, International Education Policy (HESI) program within the Department of Counseling, Higher Education, and Special Education in the College of Education, and Director of the Center for Diversity and Inclusion in Higher Education (CDIHE) at the University of Maryland, College Park. She earned her Ph.D. in Counseling and Student Personnel Services from the University of Georgia. Prior to joining UMD, she served as an Academic Associate and Program Coordinator for Student Affairs Leadership Ed.D. program in the College of Education at University of Georgia where she taught in the M.Ed., Ph.D., and Ed.D. programs. Dr. Moore also was a faculty participant and researcher in the Ghana Study Abroad in Education program at the University of Georgia. As a former Student Affairs administrator, Dr. Moore is committed to educating, learning from others, and promoting inclusive education environments in higher education. It is important for her to bring her practical skills to the classroom, informing an intentional pathway of applying theory to practice in higher education/student affairs spaces. Dr. Moore's research agenda is two tiered with a focus on: 1) Qualitative research methodologies--critical research; narrative research; epistemological pathways, and 2) Inclusive campus environments--Black student identity development; student success at historically Black colleges and universities; LGBTQ student development; student athlete transitions; contingent faculty development; study abroad in Ghana and impacts on pedagogy. She is thrilled to be a member of the thriving scholar-practitioner community at UMD, committed to advancing a social justice agenda in education and practice.

Jillian A. Martin, Ph.D. is the co-instructor for the Ghana program and is the Assistant Director for Strategy and Evaluation with the Gephardt Institute for Civic and Community Engagement at Washington University in St Louis. She has served professionally as an Assistant Director for Diversity Initiatives at Christopher Newport University, a Community Director at Georgia College and State University, and Doctoral Intern for Assessment and Evaluation with University Housing at the University of Georgia. Recently, she has served as the Graduate Assessment Specialist with the University of Georgia's Department of University Housing. Dr. Martin is an outcomes/evidence based scholar-practitioner devoted to inclusion and social justice education. She has supported divisions of student affairs through her skills in budget management, assessment practices, crisis management, strategic planning, program development and implementation, and student counseling. Her research agenda includes: student athlete transitions, socialization of student affairs professionals, and student services in higher education within an Ghanaian context and epistemological pathways, case study design, and survey design. Her dissertation research explores student services at a liberal arts institution in Ghana focusing on the implications of assessment practices with a student services unit at a Ghanaian institution. Dr. Martin has extensive research and practice in Ghana. She continues to present regionally and nationally while contributing to scholarship through publications.
